During the Iceland's Eyjafjallajokull Volcano eruption in April 2010, there were many flights that were grounded in the United Kingdom and several other European countries. This incident caused great inconvenience to travellers and businesses not only in Europe but other parts of the world. It affected lives and businesses, and many were unable to implement measures to mitigate losses. This is only one of the many other unforeseen situations that could happen to you and your business.

Understand how Business Continuity Management (BCM) can help reduce, mitigate and ensure minimal disruption to your business due to unforeseen circumstances. BCM ensures that proactive and reactive measures are in place for prevention and recovery of interruptions to organisational activities and safeguard the reputation of the business as well as the interests of stakeholders. The ability to weather adversity will give your company an edge against your competitors.

Learn about the National BCM Programme championed by SBF and the funding available in getting your organisation BCM-ready.
